As you read this text, you will notice that we seamlessly flow from sections of bold text, to sections in a completely different font or a completely different size. This text will even flow over lines, and even if we use really long words like antidisestablishmentarianism or supercalifragilisticexpialidocious. Using the FlowText() function is fun!

We can embed line feeds into flow text lines like this:

They are handled just like you'd expect.

They're ignored at the start and end of the line. - There are no gaps before or after this line.

This is the next line.

While we don't recommend you combine crazy alignment tricks with line feeds, it works as if there was a Ln() call and new FlowText() call at each line feed. See:

Using the HTMLText() function is fun!

This is another paragraph, with some default styling. We're not using a 'p' tag so as to test that bold and other formatting works properly. And new lines too.

Let's write a lot of text to ensure that it flows over page boundaries properly. We're really pushing the boat out here, gotta make sure it's all correct. Hmm Lots of text, LOATS OOOOVVV TEEEAACCKKSST. Ahem. So lots of text, lots and lots of text. Long words too, antidisestablishmentarianism, supercalifragilisticexpialidocious, refrigerator?... ok, that's enough.

This is testing the new HTML in table functionality.

We can even do paragraphs and stuff like that. It's awesomely awesome!

This is a second paragraph. It even has bold, underlined and italic text in it.

How about we test things like this .

This is centered text

We can also break in the middle of lines!

Let's test all the fancy functions of tables!

This is a test. This is a really long line containing lots and lots of text and stuff. This is a shorter line. That was a blank line, just for kicks. This line contains a really long word. It is supercalifragilisticexpialidocious. We also know the word Antidisestablishmentarianism.	This is a second cell, it should be aligned properly, especially once we're off the first line. This is another line to check the alignment.
offsetting is working properly

It's also middle aligned.

be fun. So yeah, that's what's happening. Like it or not.

Annoyingly, I didn't make this line long enough the first time,
so I'm resorting to tricks like this:

And this:

To just make it fricking
long enough. What do I have to do?

What about now, is
this long enough,
dammit?!?!?!?!?

And now it looks like I need it to be even longer!

Sigh

I'm going to cheat and just duplicate what's above:

Duplication START:

This is a really long line. We're testing how text in cells is transferred to the next page, and so on and so forth. As such, this is going to contain a massive amount of text, which we will use
to test this, then we'll repeat the first line
again, just to make sure that nothing's broken. If it has, we'll have to fix the bug,
which may or may not be fun. So yeah, that's

	what's happening. Like it or not. Annoyingly, I didn't make this line long enough the first time, so I'm resorting to tricks like this: And this: To just make it fricking long enough. This is a test. This is a really long line containing lots and lots of text and stuff. This is a shorter line. That was a blank line, just for kicks. This line contains a really long word.
